In the experiments on albino rats immunodepression induced by gamma irradiation at a dose of 0.5 Gy in 6 and 15 days was not accompanied by an increase in the number of immune cells in the blood and by the decrease in their functional activity. Within 8 days after irradiation with a dose of 4.0 Gy the number of macrophages and their functional activity increased, while that of lymphocytes and their functional activity decreased. The compensatory growth of all immune cells and the reactivation of their activity within 16-24 days after irradiation was not detected.
