This study examines community health centres' (CHCs) history, activities and future role in surveillance and outbreak response. A survey of CHC surveillance activities from 1993 to 1998 was sent to all 136 practising CHCs in the province of British Columbia (BC). A total of 93% of BC CHCs responded to the survey. While only 13% of BC CHCs had established laboratory services, 97% of CHCs described provision of laboratory services as an important element of their role. Active case surveillance (ACS) and/or syndromic surveillance are the most important surveillance activities, both of which were reported by 97% and 90% of CHCs, respectively. Although 91% of CHCs met the provincial diagnostic testing threshold for ACS, many did not report to the provincial surveillance system. A total of 80% of CHCs reported a laboratory-confirmed case of influenza-like illness (ILI) annually. Only 27% reported an outbreak or outbreak investigation. CHCs in the western part of BC report more outbreaks than those in other regions. The BC CHCs conducted a variety of surveillance and outbreak response activities and were a major source of ILI reports during the 1993 to 1998 period. the diagnosis? A. I'm not a dermatologist, but I would look for a rash in the anus or vulva. It could be herpes, a bacterial infection or an allergic reaction. But I'd be looking for any unusual rash in those areas. Q. How does someone treat the symptoms of herpes? A. It's a very common venereal disease that people get. Everyone has been exposed to it. It's just not spread by normal toilet activity.
