Guitar Hero one-on-one, but what, and what is it? The video, which was posted earlier today, has garnered hundreds of thousands of views already. According to the post, the upcoming livestream will happen tonight at 8 PM Eastern Time, so definitely check it out if you're a Guitar Hero devotee. What follows, we can only speculate, but what the livestream is teasing is something new to the franchise. In the video, Activision's Joe Janiak seems to be showing off the interface that will show when players are in the "Battle Mode" on the new title. It seems to be a one-on-one mode that's made to mimic the experience of a real-life, one-on-one, in-person, practice session. That's pretty exciting, right? Because according to the YouTube description, any of the four controllers can be used, and the game is set in a dimly lit room where there are a bunch of electric guitars and drums. We can't wait to see what the rules are, because the possibilities are endless, and it's clear that Janiak is a huge fan of the franchise, judging by the enthusiasm he has shown throughout the video, and the fact that he's had the idea since he was a kid. It looks very much like something gamers are going to enjoy. Look for the livestream at 8 PM Eastern Time tonight on the official
