Packard Bell E-Series PCs, and other

Packard Bell products, come equipped with an ACPI BIOS. This is simply a more advanced, less tolerant BIOS. It's functionally identical to the BIOS shipped on Microsoft OEM PCs, but it's often considered more secure because it's been enhanced to filter out unwanted or dangerous code. You can be locked out of your PC when using tools that don't play well with the new BIOS. This is very rare, but possible if you continue to use hack tools after having updated your PC to the new BIOS. Another issue is that disabling ACPI is something of an annoyance. If you have to update your PC, there are a lot of steps involved, and your system may lock up. If you're locked out of your system, you can download an ACPI BIOS from Packard Bell or find one online. See the Service section for more information on how to access the BIOS. You might be locked out of your computer.
