Fueling Under The Influence Posted on:December 19, 2013 Many children throughout the western world are being raised under the belief that the consumption of alcohol is inappropriate. With the increase in alcoholism in many countries, there has been a call for government intervention and the establishment of prevention programs. But it is difficult for governments to run programs with the simple proviso that they be based upon the outcome that they are trying to achieve. In general, people's attitudes towards alcohol are influenced by the prevailing belief systems. Both the Christian and Islamic belief systems are negative towards the use of alcohol. Alcohol has a direct influence on a person's thinking, behaviour and beliefs. Both the Bible and the Koran contain statements regarding the adverse effects of alcohol, such as the negative influences on the mind of people and the body of people. Islam also condemns the use of alcohol for those of Islamic descent. Alcohol has been included as a forbidden substance in the Islamic belief system, a source of doubt and ignorance. The Christian belief system contains no specific prohibition on alcohol, but is a very strict prohibition on the use of all drugs in general. Alcohol is also listed as a drug, and is mentioned in the Bible as an instrument of temptation and sin. However, alcohol is mentioned in the Bible as a drug of choice among the Israelites. The connection between alcohol and sin is the consequence of the negative effects of alcohol, and not the reason for its use. In the Bible, drunkenness is the result of sin, not the cause of sin. The reason for the negative effects of alcohol and the effects of alcohol on man's mind are clearly explained in the Bible ca3bfb1094

The paper analyzes the communicative-social work environment in the workplace, the way workers meet and the implications of this activity. The data was collected in a qualitative approach. The subjects of the study were interviewed, in October and December 2006, in the premises of three Brazilian factories. The sample of the study was made up of 25 workers employed for more than one year, who worked in shifts, including the night shift. The phenomenon of the work is highly influenced by family-work, the latter contributing to the subjectivity of the work. It is pointed out that the family is a fundamental social space for the subjectivity of the work. From the analysis of this relationship, there emerges the need for a new articulation of the industrialization model to account for the different cultures, economic models and social characteristics. The case of a self-proclaimed “al-Qaeda terrorist” who has been jailed in Britain for more than a year for fighting alongside the Islamic State (Isis) in Syria raises questions about his release and that of several other Britons who had travelled to the war zone. The man, known only as Mohammed A, now faces a further 18 months in prison for breaching his bail terms by posting extremist material on social media. The 24-year-old, arrested in London in November 2014, told investigators he had been radicalised in prison, and received training and arms from the group before he left the country to fight in Syria in May 2014. He has been accused of posting several images and video clips of himself on Facebook, showing him holding a Kalashnikov rifle and standing next to a jihadist flag. The BBC revealed
