The difference from other game engines lies in the way the game engine works. It has been designed from the ground up to handle real life sports like football and basketball, with the possibility to extrapolate these attributes into gameplay. The goal of the new HyperMotion technology is to use real life data to directly affect the dynamics and shape of the game. “Even though you might play FIFA for several years you will probably never have seen or experienced something like ‘HyperMotion’ in the game. In FIFA you'll notice certain ball control and player movements we've not seen before.” says Jordan Morgan, Creative Director of FIFA.
