… the warning went out across the regions- The Crystals- were now also being transported through space to the next destination. A dark planet. Unknown species. A new frontier. Now are you brave enough to move on? The Final Station is a minimalist science-fiction horror game that combines the classic role-playing elements of procedurally-generated content with an uncompromising (and quite beautiful) visual aesthetic. Your character has almost no combat abilities but must travel to the new planet and discover what happened to the crystals that are being used to power it. Your journey will be rather slow and lonely, but there are moments of sublime beauty, bizarre scares, and even what is perhaps the most difficult part of being a 'non-combatant'—psychological torment. Our Journey We will not be speaking to the main character, but rather to a small team of survivors that will be with us throughout the whole game. The game starts with the characters being stuck in the Spaceplane, with the pilot trying to keep the ship in the air, being repeatedly kicked out by mechanical bolts that fall through the hole in the floor and start firing at the passengers, but the core focus is on the emotional component of the game, and the interesting way that The Final Station decides to go about it. Most Role-Playing Games are easy to start and if you have no idea what your character is, and what kind of traits they will have, you can just 'save' the save-screen and you are done. The Final Station creates a custom character for you, you have a fixed gender, age, and background. This makes it easy to empathize with the characters, and to feel for them even when you are just watching a static map. You have a certain power, and a set of skills, you can also start by using a fixed set of skills or by choosing one of the skills you will have for the rest of the game. If you think that this might be a little difficult to get into, don't worry! The language of the game is very simple, and even newcomers should be able to understand the dialogue and its implications. Your characters will react to everything that happens, and you can read their minds and see if the messages are right or if they are hiding something. Your main goal is to survive, but to do that you will need to collect resources, but this will require exploring the world and finding other people that can help you, or work against you

This was an experimental map I made where I tried to make a vibrant, colorful, and varied environment for people to run around in and play with. The goal was to recreate the feeling of the game Bastion, just on a real world scale. I made the map for my personal enjoyment, so there aren't any gameplay challenges like there are in actual Bastion games. However, you can enjoy some of the unique level design and freedom to explore. Hope you enjoy playing this garden. -Diedam Dying Maelstrom 2 is coming to Steam.
