/Surgical Cement Application to a Lumbar Disc: Microimplants, Microshunts, and Cement Filters. A computed tomographic (CT) scan of the lumbar spine was performed on a 48-year-old male patient with lumbar pain. Upon review of the CT scan, a left-sided sacral sequestered disc herniation was identified. A subsequent lumbar magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scan of the patient revealed a thinning of the left pars interarticularis, which seemed to be secondary to the left sequestered disc herniation. A patient history and physical examination were not contributory. A minimally invasive surgical approach with percutaneous placement of the microscope directly to the sequestered disc was selected as the ideal method of treatment for this patient. Q: What is the policy of the site about using "bump" for answers without much real effort put into the answer? I've seen this now and then. Sometimes, there is someone who will answer a question, but they will do the bare minimum to get the job done. Like, answer the question, no editing the question to better format the code, no formatting the code, etc. Even if they are wrong in their answer, I'm not sure if we should get our panties in a wad. Should we close the question until the "bumpers" get their crap together to make a better answer? A: The policy for in any way engaging in discussion in comments is to make all comments and discussions to be held in chat. Comments are meant to enable everyone in the room to chat about the post and help flesh things out. To do this properly we must moderate to keep noise and off topic discussions to the correct Stack Exchange channels. Bumping or otherwise bumping a post just to disrupt the flow of the site is not really a good thing, as people who have been following the site and getting value from the site will end up having their discussions curtailed, and will end up leaving. We would prefer if answers that are low quality answered rather than bumped. In general I would not get terribly upset, but I'm aware that this is not a standard approach that most people are used to and it's hard to deal with as an isolated incident, and it is important that we consider the long term implications. We also need to be aware that we can't always rely on everyone to follow
