Lipid-lowering therapy: new approaches. The results of major clinical trials comparing lipid-lowering therapies show that HMG-CoA reductase inhibitors are at least as effective as diet and that combined diet and drug therapy are more effective than either alone. Of the potent lipid-lowering drugs, colestipol, niacin, and gemfibrozil appear to have the least effect on coagulation parameters and to have the fewest side effects. Alternative therapies, such as the use of bile acid receptor agonists, cholestyramine, and nicotinic acid derivatives have shown some promise in animal models, but further trials in humans are needed.
