The latest version of Photoshop (CS3) contains enough automation to enable an experienced user to get by without a lot of hard work. Photoshop for beginners can be bought as a new program or a separate application. Either way, it's a massive program: The latest version, Photoshop CS3, includes 17.8GB of editing software. More traditional approach: Tinkercad Tinkercad is Adobe's answer to 123D and SketchUp, using a different editing technology. It enables you to place, scale, and rotate 3D models with ease. Tinkercad is a wireframe approach to Photoshop. It can also work with 3D models. Tinkercad is free, and offers 3D modeling tools for free. Tinkercad is an Adobe product, and runs on the same software platform as Photoshop. Free alternatives to Photoshop for professionals If you're serious about making good-looking professional images, you may be tempted to try a program that's free. There are tons of free editors out there, and that's the big advantage to them. The disadvantage is that many free editors don't work as well as Photoshop, and some offer nothing more than simple tasks that your current software can perform. If you're working with a presentation, you want to make sure that you're not introducing any noticeable artifacts or unwanted elements to your images. Photoshop and Bridge cost money. You may not want to pay for the more robust tools. Free software should offer enough functionality to create good results, but there's no harm in trying free alternatives. Used properly, free image-editing software can be a valuable asset. Be careful, however, not to let images you create on a free editor get used in print, broadcast, or online and then find that you didn't take any advantage of the features in the editor you chose. Here are some really good tools to consider using: A4S – The A4S program enables you to batch-edit multiple images at once. It offers very basic editing tools, but does so in a functional manner, and works on images in most file formats. The price is $69 and you can download it from

Q: How do I extend a UIView to multiple views? I have made a basic UIView subclass in my project. Now i have to implement the view in a tab bar controller. Right now I have the view configured like this: `UIView *view = [[UIView alloc] initWithFrame:self.view.bounds]; [self.view addSubview:view]; [view release];` Now I have an instance of the view created in the `viewDidLoad` of the tab bar controller. Now I have to add objects from the view to the `tabBarController`. How can i do this? Do I need to create a `viewController` to do this and add the `tabBarController` there or is there a other way? I would really appreciate any help on this.

A: You are absolutely correct. You create a `viewController` (perhaps in IB) that is a child of the `tab bar controller`. Then you are correct in saying: `UIView *view = [[UIView alloc] initWithFrame:self.view.bounds]; [self.view addSubview:view]; [view release];` I usually try to move the creation and initialization of a view, along with other non-trivial stuff, out of the `viewDidLoad` methods of the various controllers. In other words, I create views and stuff whenever I need them, and put them in the actual `viewController's view`, when I'm ready to display them. This technique works fine for UIViewControllers. However, as soon as you put a view controller into a "container" that defines a scroll view (such as a UITableView, UICollectionView, or UIScrollView), you are going to have a much harder time. These views automatically manage all their scrolling behavior themselves, they don't use their parent's view or any other views underneath it. I think this is a good thing; it's much easier to design UIs this way, and makes it possible to make very complex UIs without having to code complex math stuff, or figure out the correct frame of complex subviews. Anyway, I'll leave it up to you to figure out a way to do what you want. If you're just wanting to put your view in a tab bar as is, a container view for a UITableView would work fine (see the China is promoting its Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) in Europe, becoming the first foreign country to hold an annual forum in Central and Eastern Europe. The inaugural Chinese BRI Forum, held in Prague and Brno, Czech Republic, on Friday, was attended by more than 500 people from more than 20 countries, according to the Chinese embassy. On its website, the BRI Forum said the meeting promoted "bilateral and multilateral cooperation" on the initiative. "It is the first forum held by the BRI initiative in Central and Eastern Europe and also the first China-Czech-Slovakia bilateral cooperation forum," said Wai.Jingwang, deputy director of the BRI forum. China's President Xi Jinping and Czech President Miloš Zeman signed a joint declaration in March at the Beijing Summit of the Forum on China-Europe Exchange and Cooperation (FOCAC) in Beijing, pledging to promote the two countries' comprehensive strategic cooperative partnership. Wai said the two countries' existing cooperation had made great achievements. "China and Europe have more common interests and the BRI, as a new avenue to realize mutual benefit, has provided a strong platform for cooperation," she said. The initiative is supported by 69 countries and has taken shape as a "new major international cooperation mode," which aims to connect the economies of China and the world's countries and regions with a network of corridors, roads, railways, bridges and ports. Li Shengyong, director of the Department of International Cooperation of the central government's Asia-Europe International Communication Office, said the initiative has become a major strategy in China's foreign policy. Li said since the initiative was launched by President Xi Jinping in 2013, China's exports to the world have increased by 2.75 trillion yuan, with emerging markets and developing economies accounting for 60 percent and 70 percent of the total, respectively. Li added that 23 countries including Germany, Britain and Canada have already joined the BRI. That the origins of many of the problems in society are rooted in the poverty of the imagination is not news.
